FOCUS ON Home Remedies for ticks on Dogs.

Ticks are a constant problem for dogs, especially if you live in a warm, dry climate. Although it may seem easy to use an arsenal of chemical products, there are safer ways to protect your pet from ticks, and, in the long term, avoiding toxic chemicals will mean a healthier pet. There are a variety of natural tick repellents that are all worth trying. Ticks are a stubborn problem, so when it comes to natural solutions, using more than one is a good idea.

Herbal Tick Spray

Put a teaspoon of vodka in a small spray bottle and add two drops of basil or eucalyptus essential oil. Shake it until the oils and vodka are blended, then add a teaspoon of vinegar. Mist your dog's coat then rub it in with your hands. Essential oil can burn so don't spray it near your dog's face. You can also make a simple spray by cutting a fresh lemon into quarters and steeping the quarters overnight in a jar of boiling water.

Dietary Preventatives

Give your dog a brewer's yeast tablet or add it to its dog food. Dogs usually love the taste and will consider it a treat. Brewer's yeast tablets with garlic added can be especially effective. You can also give your dog fresh garlic, but give it in small quantities as garlic can give your dog anemia. A splash of apple cider vinegar added to your dog's water will make your dog's blood more acidic and less appealing to ticks.

Herbal Tick Collar

Put a few drops of essential oil on a rope collar. Try Lavender, tea tree oil, citronella, geranium or eucalyptus, which are all effective natural tick repellents. Allow the oils to absorb into the collar before putting it on your dog and reapply the oils each week. The essential oils can be applied to a bandanna as well and tied around your dog's neck.

Bath Time

After you bathe your dog, add 2 to 4 cups of apple cider vinegar to the rinse water and rinse the dog thoroughly, especially its neck, paws and ears. Be careful not to splash vinegar into its eyes because it can sting. You can also add a small amount of apple cider vinegar to your dog's regular shampoo for an extra dose of prevention.

Environmental Preventatives

Talk to the professionals at your Garden center about nematodes and establish some in your lawn and your dog's play area where they will feast on tick larva. Diatomaceous earth, made of finely ground marine organisms and tiny fossils, is another natural environmental tick repellent. The powder is safe for people and pets but is poisonous to ticks. Simply spread the powder in your lawn and garden when the ground is dry. Reapply after rain.

Meet my Vet, Rowan has my puppy back on the road to recovery after another vet told me to euthanase her. He is treating her with Chinese herbs, and homeopathy drops, among other things

Dr Rowan Kilmartin

Rowan has been in practice since 1978. Together with his wife Judy, Rowan built and developed, over 10 years, a successful small and large animal practice in Gladstone. During that time he obtained a Masters Degree in Animal Chiropractic, and became qualified in Acupuncture. In 2002 Rowan moved to the Ormeau area where he spent the next four years specialising in chiropractic care and acupuncture and developing a hands-on approach to veterinary care. Together with Judy, he built Animal Options and is now busy running the clinic and servicing an equine clientele.

To relax, Rowan enjoys clay target shooting and maintaining their acreage property.

Rowan is President of the Australian Veterinary Chiropractic Association (AVCA), a member of the Australian Veterinary Association (AVA), and special interest groups Equine Veterinary Association (EVA), Holistic (AHV), and Acupuncture (AVAG).

About Animal Chiropractic

When and when not to use it

Many people ask me how I became an animal chiropractor. The truth is I went to university and did a Master of Chiropractic Science (animal chiropractic) degree. This sort of training is available in selected universities across the globe. The other thing people ask me is why I did this sort of training. After being in veterinary practice for twenty years I realised that there were some things that we were not dealing with. One of these was animals that had a pain or lameness issue and we failed to find a cause. There was no pathology evident on X-rays. I had heard about chiropractic and osteopathy but really knew nothing about these disciplines. I set out to find out and discovered that the palpatory skills of many of the human practitioners were in another dimension. It is the development of this sort of skill which alters the way you can look at an animal. It takes some years of work and is a personal skill that gets better every day.

There is now days a strong demand for chiropractic care for canines for the treatment of musculo-skeletal and other disorders particularly those problems which are seen to be limiting the performance of the animal. With the huge growth of canine sports across the globe there is a concurrent demand for keeping these animals fit, pain free and at the top of their sporting ladder. In the event an animal is not performing well then it seems the trainer knows there is something wrong usually very early in the piece. Because they recognise signs early very often the problems can be rectified with chiropractic care in just one or two treatments.

In other instances there are soft tissue injuries. Treating an acute (soft) tissue injury requires a different approach than treating either a long standing injury or a spinal movement restrictive injury. The mainstream approach a lot of the time is to determine whether or not the animal needs an X-ray then provide pain relief by way of an anti-inflammatory tablet or injection or both, and rest the animal.

Our approach is different. Primarily localising the primary lesion is achieved after a manual examination which considers the spinal structure and the soft tissues, with the animal standing still and where necessary in motion. In a quadruped (a four legged animal) a loading pattern will occur when there is a problem. In other words, because the animal had four weight bearing limbs they will shift their weight to favour the injured area. Because of this loading pattern there is consequent spinal torsion, ligamentous torsion and changes in forces through muscles and tendons. Sounds really basic but it can get complex.

This load shift occurs before a visual lameness develops, and we need to be able to detect this. This is what animal chiropractic doctors are trained to do. If lameness is developing then the animal required treatment a good deal earlier. If the primary lesion is in the spine then a decision needs to be made whether or not it will respond to chiropractic adjustment. Remember that all chiropractic adjustments are not fast moves that result in a 'crack' sound. There are also low force and even non-force techniques.

In general, in many acute injuries chiropractic adjustment may make the situation worse. In these cases treatment may consist of acupuncture, medical laser, homotoxicology (use of the Heel products) herbal or other supportive medicine. If the severity of the injury is such the animal requires non-steroidal antiinflammatories then a mainstream approach may be adopted. In some cases an X-ray is needed, particularly when pathology, such as OCD, is suspected.

There are a huge range of situations where chiropractic is effective. In most cases, unlike humans, the animal will respond to one treatment. The reason for this is that given the opportunity animals want to be well and will heal themselves and look after themselves. Still there are the loveable clowns and buffoons of the canine world who seem to frequent the clinic at regular intervals.

Chiropractors recognize innate intelligence which can be defined as the intrinsic ability of a healthy organism to react physiologically to the changing conditions of the external and internal environment. The core principle of chiropractic theory is that the nervous system controls and coordinates function of all tissues of the body. If the nervous system is not functioning normally then the area of the body supplied by that part of the nervous system will be adversely affected. Thus chiropractic is concerned with the investigation of the relationship between structure (primarily of the spine) and function (primarily of the nervous system), of the body, that leads to restoration and preservation of health.

The Jungle Book predators who have forged a Lifelong friendship.....

December 2009

They make an unlikely trio, but Baloo the bear, Leo the lion and Shere Khan the tiger have forged an unusual strong bond

They had been kept as status symbol pets by drug barons.

Delivered to Noah's Ark Animal Rescue Centre in Locust6 Grove, Georgia, the decision was made to keep the youngsters together, because of their budding rapport.

“We could have separated them, but since they came as a kind of family, the Zoo decided to keep them together”, said Diane Smith, assistant director of Noah's Ark.

To our knowledge, this is the only place where you will find this combination of animals together. Living with the Zoos founders for eight years, Shere Khan, Baloo, and Leo have now moved to a purpose-built habitat where the U.S public can now witness first hand their touching relationship. “We didn't have the money to move them at first”, said Diane, “ now their habitat is sorted and they have been moved away from the children's zoo area where the public couldn't get a good look, it is now possible to see Baloo who is a 1000 lb bear, Shere Khan a 350 lb tiger, and Leo who is also 350 lb, messing around like brothers.”

“They are totally oblivious to the fact that in any other circumstance, they would not be friends” Handled by Charles and Jama Hedgecoth, the Zoos owners and founders, the three friendly giants appear to have no comprehension of their animal differences.

“Baloo and Shere Khan are very close” says Diane

Cont over...

“ That is because they rise early, and as Leo is a lion, he like to spend most of the day sleeping. It is wonderful and magical to see a giant American Black Bear put his arm around a Bengal Tiger, and then to see the tiger nuzzle up to the bear like a domestic cat”
When Leo wakes up, the three of them mess around before settling down for some food

“They eat , sleep and play together. The clubhouse had to be very sturdy for the guys as they all sleep in it together. We also had to include a creek in their new habitat as the tiger and the bear like to be in the water”, says Jama

Clinics ignore booster advice

Queensland vets are continuing to recommend annual pet vaccinations, ignoring the advice from the nations peak veterinary body.

The Australian Veterinary Association last year changed its policy on annual vaccinations to recommend vaccination boosters once every three years for adult cats and dogs, or even less often.

It came after the global veterinary body, the World Small Animal Veterinary Association, formally endorsed triennial vaccinations in 2007, after scientific evidence annual vaccinations were unnecessary and potentially harmful.

It meant Australian pet owners might be wasting millions of dollars a year on vaccination boosters.

In its new policy, the AVA states vaccination immunity might be “ significantly longer than twelve months.”

“ it is being recognized that veterinarians should aim to reduce the vaccine load on individual animals to minimize the risk of adverse reactions to the products,” the policy states.

But phone calls by The Sunday Mail to twenty Queensland veterinary clinics, revealed all were still recommending annual vaccination top ups.

Many of the vets were AVA members. Vaccination boosters can cost $75.00 for a cat and up to $80.00 for a dog.

Some clinics are still sending notices reminding customers their pets annual vaccination was due. Some dog breeders have hit out at vets for their slow reaction to studies linking over-vaccination to serious health issues such as cancer.

But AVA president Mark Lawrie said many vets were afraid the change would lead to disease outbreaks, such as the deadly parvovirus.

“More animals die from not being vaccinated than from being vaccinated and issues about vaccination reactions,” he said.

Article printed in the Sunday Mail 31-1-10

Footnote: I personally find this very interesting as my new puppy has Renal failure after having vaccinations, Heartworm, and Flea control, and according to my vet, was caused by a toxic overload of all of the above..She is one of the unlucky ones who cannot take it. Fay Clark.

How to Survive a Heart Attack When Alone

Since many people are alone when they suffer a heart attack, without help, the person whose heart is beating improperly and who begins to feel faint, has only about 10 seconds before losing consciousness.

What To Do ?

Do not panic, but start coughing repeatedly and very vigorously. A deep breath should be taken before each cough, the cough must be deep and prolonged as when producing sputum from deep inside the chest.

A breath and a cough must be repeated about every two seconds without let up until help arrives, or until the heart is felt to be beating normally again.

Deep breaths get oxygen into the lungs and coughing movements squeeze the heart and keep blood circulating. The squeezing pressure on the heart also helps it regain normal rhythm. In this way, heart attack victims can make it to hospital.
